Nevada Leads In Metals

The statement of the officers of the United States mint and the United States geological survey concerning the production of gold and silver in the United States does not do Nevada justice, says the Reno Journal.

This statement, published throughout the land recently, holds Nevada responsible for a decrease in the gold production in total of $3,438,500 because Nevada's gold mines decreased in production by $4,521,200. There was enough editorial writing in the official statement to give Nevada a bad mining reputation, but there was not enough editorial writing to show Nevada stands in the forefront of precious metal mining states.

Nevada in 1912 produced $13,575,700 in gold and $13,851,400 in silver, a total of $27,427,100, which is greater than the record of any other state or territory in the United States. Colorado, the nearest competitor, produced $18,741,200 in gold and only $7,933,100 in silver, a total of $26,674,300—nearly a million less than Nevada. California, with twenty millions in gold, produced one million in silver, in round numbers. Alaska, with seventeen millions in gold, produced half a million in silver. Idaho, with a million and a half in gold, produced nearly eight millions in silver. Montana has twelve and a half in silver but only $3,707,900 in gold.

It was the decrease in Nevada's gold that cut down the total production of the country. This state holds the balance in the gold production, it excels vastly in the silver production and it is unapproachable in the combined wealth of precious metal.

It seems a fine distinction to give to Colorado or to California the crown merely because those states lead in gold production. Wealth is in gold and silver and if it is wealth that is to be sought and wealth production to be credited, the government editorial writers should point the way to Nevada.

Ulster's Threat

Ulster unionists claim to have an enlisted army of 100,000 men ready to fight against Irish home rule and now are now being counted in the Orange lodges of the north of Ireland. The weak point in the unionist cause is the simple fact that a majority of the people of Ulster itself are in favor of home rule, and that the home rulers carried the city of Londonderry in a recent by-election which was generally regarded as a test of the relative strength of the two parties.

The day for successful revolutions in settled countries is past. Even if the unionists were able to muster 100,000 men and arm them with rifles and bayonets they would still be unable to make a showing against a regular army corps of half that number of men. Small arms may be bought and hidden away, but it is impossible for the Ulsterites or any other political rebels to buy and hide away heavy artillery and machine guns. Without artillery they would be helpless. The north of Ireland is a fairly open country which presents no difficulties in the maneuvering of troops, and a few batteries of field artillery would drive the insurgents into the sea in short order. Guerrillas may fight successfully without artillery in very mountainous countries as in primeval forests, but not in an old settled country like Ireland, with its good roads and other facilities for moving even the heavier siege guns.

Crime and Its Profits

The pearl necklace, valued at $675,000, stolen in transit between London and Paris, has been recovered through a workman who found it loosely wrapped in a paper, lying on the street. The incident illustrates that some things may be so valuable that they are not worth stealing. The actual theft of the gems was deftly and neatly done. As soon, however, as an attempt was made to dispose of the loot, five arrests followed. It is one of the quirks of the criminal mind that the bump of foresight in the cranial development is a dent. This is a dispensation of Providence for the protection of society.

The minds which could conceive and the hands which could execute this baffling crime did not take into consideration the necessity of profiting by the act. What did it profit the man who stole the "Mona Lisa"? For over two decades the bonds taken from the vaults of the Manhattan bank by Johnny Hope and his friends were as safe as a keg of blasting powder under a bonfire. No counterfeiter is safe from apprehension in or out of jail.

Truly the path to "easy money" is beset with thorns and never pays. The defects of the criminal mind form a better protection to the honest than many policemen.
